The Honorable Howard McKeon
Ranking Member,
Committee on Education and Labor
2101 Rayburn House Office Building
United States House of Representatives

Dear Chairman Miller and Ranking Member McKeon:

I am writing today on behalf of the American Benefits Council to express our continued concern regarding proposed legislation (H.R. 2831) to overrule the Supreme Court's Ledbetter v. Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. decision.

The Council is a public policy organization representing principally Fortune 500 companies and other organizations that assist employers of all sizes in providing benefits to employees. Collectively, the Council's members either sponsor directly or provide services to retirement and health plans that cover more than 100 million Americans. The Council's area of expertise is in the employee benefit area, and accordingly we limit our letter to the possible effect of the proposed legislation on benefit programs.

We previously wrote to you about H.R. 2831 because the proposed legislation could possibly raise serious retirement plan issues. Under the bill, each payment of compensation or benefits that is lower because of past discrimination is arguably a new act of discrimination and thus an employee could file a charge or sue many years after the discrimination actually occurred. We appreciate that the legislation was modified prior to Committee consideration to include a finding that the bill is not intended to change the current law treatment of when pension distributions are considered paid. As we understand it, this finding was intended to clarify that, for purposes of the legislation, pension payments are treated as paid when an employee enters retirement, and not upon the issuance of each annuity check. Such a clarification would help address an important concern, i.e., that an individual who has been retired for many years could file a charge or sue based on acts that occurred during his or her active service. However, in order to be effective, we believe that the finding must be reflected in the actual bill language; as currently drafted, the finding and bill language appear to conflict.

Moreover, the underlying significant concern as to how a judgment in favor of a plaintiff would affect an employer-sponsored retirement plan still remains unaddressed. For example, if a company maintains a defined benefit plan that calculates benefits based on an employee's final average pay, would the plan need to recalculate the plaintiff's benefit based on the revised pay? What if the lawsuit is a class action, so that large numbers of plan participants could be making the same claim for much higher benefits? What if this caused the plan to be woefully underfunded or resulted in the employer being forced to terminate the plan? The retirement security of other participants could be severely undermined as a result of a claim now being made for discrimination that occurred many years before.

We continue to be concerned about the possible effect of the proposed legislation on 401(k) plans, 403(b) plans (those maintained by schools and charities generally), and 457 plans maintained by state and local governments. To what extent would such plans have to recalculate benefits payable to the plaintiffs? If the employer needs to fund enormous additional benefits for the plaintiffs, would the employer effectively have to reduce or eliminate contributions for others?

We urge that this legislation not be considered by the full House until the possible ramifications of the bill are fully understood. We are very mindful of the concerns that led to the drafting of this proposed legislation but we continue to have concerns about its application to employer sponsored retirement plans in its current form. It would be very unfortunate to risk the retirement security of large numbers of plan participants as a result of failing to address the question of how a judgment in favor of a plaintiff affects the employer's retirement plans.

Sincerely,
